NEWPORT, Monday, February 11, 1867.

SOLDIERS' MEMORIAL.

The question of the creation of a suitable memorial to the Rhode Island men, who sacrificed their lives in aiding in the suppression of the rebellion, is one of great importance, and it ought to be well considered before the final step is taken. It is not intended only as a memorial of the brave dead, but also of the appreciation and gratitude of the living. Were it only to transmit the names of the heroes to posterity, or to be, simply, record of their names and heroic deeds, simplicity and endurance would be the important qualities to be desired, but the Soldiers' Monuments that are springing into existence all over the land ought to be the expression of the artistic feeling and appreciation of the men who build, as well as movements of the deeds of those, in whose honor they are built. It seems that the Legislative Committee have selected the design now on exhibition in the office of the Secretary of State in Providence, and recommend its construction. It is not, perhaps, very expensive expression of the admiration and gratitude of the people of Rhode Island, but it can scarcely be claimed for it, that it is either appropriate, graceful or artistic. It possessed the great advantage, as compared with rival designs, of being a model, while they were either photographs or drawings, and it is highly probable, that either one of the designs shown by model would be preferred, or rather more perfectly comprehended. The writer had no opportunity of studying the various designs critically, but a slight examination seemed sufficient to demonstrate, that while the model adopted is exceedingly deficient in artistic expression, several of the rejected designs were unusually rich in that important element.

For instance, the female form surmounting the model is purely conventional, expressionless, godless, preiding over certain mythological figures in bosca relief, and a stiff legged sailor with three companions in erect and uneasy attitudes, suggesting to the sympathetic observer the propriety of landing chairs, and not requesting them to be seated. It has a fine base, and fair proportions, and the wings with swallows of that, are appropriate, and give breadth and solidity to the design, but it is, on the whole, a monument that Rhode Island will not be proud to show as her conception of a memorial of the services of her dead sons—unless the design is very materially modified. Among the designs hanging upon the walls in the Secretary's office, was one, not as good as the model in several minor qualities, but immensely better, in the most important one of its principal figure. A young volunteer, a splendid specimen of American manhood, stands firmly, yet graciously, sustaining the flag, whose ample folds sweep half around him. This figure is admirable in design, in sentiment, and as an architectural effect. It forms a spire.

This figure is admirable in design, in sentiment, and as an architectural effect. It forms a spire. It represents the man in whose honor the monument is constructed, and it carries the flag above, and around the man, as his inspiration, and his support.

In another design, a photograph, especially rich in general lines and artistic significance, but having less of dignity and simplicity than either of the others, the figures are in peculiarly graceful and characteristic attitudes, and appears, one of them so citizens, who, when the great Taunay died, had "no rights that the white man was bound to respect," a representative of the able millions, who, entering the war slaves, emerged from the smoke of its battle, the trusted supporters of the great, our country, and wearing the uniform that represented the noblest type of its citizens! And why shall not this monument be the expression of the id-ea, and art of the *id-*ea? Why should not the memories of the men, who died that the liberties of this people might be preserved, and that therefore the progress of the race be unimpeded, have a memorial, which disdains the ideas, and their expression in terms of Pagan Rome, shall perpetuate in granite and bronze, the faith, the hope, the art, and the grand achievements of this people, and of to-day! Such a monument ought to be built. There is no need of its being a substantial literary design, but in view of the expressive character of the work, and its permanent interest, there is every reason why a considerate, deliberate choice should be made of the best, or of the best parts of various designs, combined with skill and grace, and this choice is intended as a plea for the necessary delay.

The qualities of the vocation too, is not without interest; the secluded spot selected by the committee, may be the best that can be had. Let it be well known that in a city like Providence, where the volume of travel is confined to a very considerable extent to a single street, the post office upon that street could be found as far in the rear of the Westminster Street building, where the spaces are liberal, and where the whole population of both sides pass, and repose. Let us have a substantial, significant, artistic memorial of which we can say, "That's for me to embrace."

An eccentric American at Hamburg presented to it with an enormous bouquet arranged in the form of a coquille of the prima donna, containing at the neck a figure a valuable necklace. When Paul quitted Flambourg she took the necklace, but left the statue.

Charles Somer, according to rumor, is to retire from political life at the close of his present term, in 1869, and will spend a number of years in Europe. Governors Andrew and Bulkley are already named as candidates for the succession, and John B. Alley, the present Congressman, is said, will probably be the next nominee of the Republicans for Governor of Massachusetts.

Local Intelligence.

TEMPERANCE MEETING.—Mr. Locke, State Agent and Leader of the State of Maine, who was present at the meeting of Friday evening, was known by his active exertions in the cause of temperance, to nearly every soldier in the Union armies, having travelled extensively through the camps during the late war of the rebellion. Mr. Locke has a large fund of information in connection with the cause, and the audience were deeply interested in his remarks at that meeting. He is, besides, a Musician, a poet, and a singer, of which he gave ample proof by singing a couple of temperance songs, with the melodeon accompaniment. His performances in this respect were equal to those of a lecturer, both being of a very superior order. The following song, the words and music of which are his own composition, was one of these introduced by him.

Please, Mister birker, has your father been here?

He's not been at home for the day;

He's almost mid-night, and mother's in fear.

Some accident keeps him away,

No, no, it's a stranger, or yes, he's been here,

Some others took him away,

He's gone to the lockup, I'm sorry, my dear,

He's done something wicked, they say.

Please, Mister P. Johnson, my father is lost,

A man says you took him away;

Oh! can't he go home, sir, and what will it cost,

If mother will send you the pay?

Oh no little pleader, your father can't go,

He puts him in prison, to-day;

Go home to your mother and quick let her know

What's keeping your father away.

Oh! there's not my father who did the bad deed,

Twice drinking that maledict brain;

Oh! let him go home to dear mother, I plead,

Forsooth he'll not touch it again.

Please, sir, Mister J. Miller, please let me go home.

They say that my father's inside;

I scarcely can tell how unhappy we've been.

We could not feel worse had he died;

Mr. Locke will lecture at the Second Baptist Church in this city on Friday evening next at seven o'clock. The lecture will be free, and at the close a collection for expenses will be taken. Mr. Locke is described by those who have heard him, as a remarkably eloquent advocate of the cause, some of his admirers ranking him second only to John B. Gough.

A New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Times says: "I think I have discovered the secret of the peculiar beauty of the New York ladies. I mean the smoothness of their skin and its delicate coloring. It is owing to the constant use of Jard's 'Email de Paris.' Perhaps you do not know what the 'Email de Paris' is! What does? Its application cannot be known, for it cannot be seen. It is set forth as neither a paint, powder, paste, nor ointment, but a delicious preparation that gives both the color and texture of the polished ivory to the skin. It is used here by every lady who can afford it, from the Fifth avenue belles down to the piquant and fluffy avante store girls, who, I imagine, influence much of the trade in our retail stores. Jard, himself, is a sort of magnetism. Quenined, ugly and deformed, but with a rare love of the beautiful, since he has married a beautiful wife, and given to familiarity the 'Email de Paris'."

FIREMEN'S ELECTION.—Hydraulion and Hose Company Co. 1, held their annual meeting on Friday evening, Feb. 8, and the following officers were elected:

Captain, R. B. Taylor.

Lieutenant, William E. Dennis.

Clerk, Amos Parmenter.

Axe-man, Samuel Eus.

TEMPERANCE MEETING.—The third meeting of the series of Union Temperance prayer and Conference meetings will be held in connection with the Central Baptist prayer meeting in the vestry of that church on Wednesday evening next at the usual hour of service.

NAVAL ACADEMY.—A meeting of the citizens of Newport will be held at Aquidneck Hall, on Thursday, Feb. 14, at 8 o'clock, P. M., to take into consideration the question of the return of the Naval Academy to this place. All persons who favor the project are requested to attend.

R. B. Croston, Rufus P. Kinley, John D. Davis, C. R. Hazard Jr., William A. White, Phillip Rider, Juliet Syver, T. Mumford Seabury, Henry Hill, Wm. C. Goss, Silas H. Coltrill, Benjamin Finch, Randell Patten.

DETENTION.—The morning train from Boston was detained by the washing away of the R. R. track, so that it had not arrived at the time of our going to press. As the New York mail of Saturday is also on the way, we are without our exchange.

The great charm of METCALF'S GREAT RHEUMATIC REMEDY lies in the small quantity necessary to effect a cure. One dose (forty drops) gives instant relief, and twice repeated, seldom fails to restore the sufferer to perfect health.

Rev. Joseph W. Taggart, pastor of the Baptist Church at Wheeling, West Virginia, as the result of his first year's labor in that city, has added 73 persons to the membership of his church; has increased the church property by purchase of a new meeting-house worth about $30,000; and has added about 400 children to his Sunday School, and over 500 volumes to its library. His is a good year's work for a "Newport boy."
